

Well...

HAPPY SHOULD-HAVE-BEEN-OUR-FIRST-DAY-OF-SATS-DAY!!

You would have got yourselves up, ready for school full of a bit of anxiety and arrived ready for breakfast club where we would have filled you up on bagels, toast and orange juice. We would have had a chat about how you were feeling and tried to calm each other's nerves with some chill time before 9am. We would then have been reminding you of all those SPAG terms – present perfect, active and passive and the trickiest of them all: CAPITAL LETTERS AND FULL STOPS! 😊

After the Grammar paper, lots of ticking boxes and remembering names of different pieces of punctuation, we would have had a biscuit and a run around outside for a bit before heading back in and asking you to stare at our mouths for half an hour: YES THE SPELLING TEST!

But alas... not this year.

Many of you will have had mixed emotions about not having SATs this year – we certainly did and that's absolutely ok! So today, we would like you to reflect on how you are feeling about the fact that today has panned out differently to what we ALL expected.

Have a go at writing using the title "The tests that were written, never to be sat..."

You can write in whatever style you like and can be as open and honest as you like – we won't be offended.

We look forward to seeing your writing!
